Tory calls for an end to carding

LAW ENFORCEMENT

Mayor says the practice has 'eroded public trust'

Mayor John Tory is calling for a further moratorium on carding after a realization that the recent "incremental" reforms made by the police board to the controversial practice didn't go far enough to resolve the "toxic" impact carding has created within communities.

"I will now say that while I thought that the new policy was a step forward ... I think in terms of the reaction that's taken place in the community at large, people didn't see it that way," Tory told Torstar News Service in his office at city hall on Sunday.

Tory is expected to say in a speech on Monday that "the best investigative tool the police have is the trust of the people they serve and protect" and that carding has "eroded public trust to a level that is clearly unacceptable."

But while the mayor will bring a motion to halt the practice at the June 18 meeting of the board, it doesn't mean that carding will be abolished.

Tory wants to start with a "clean slate" and create a policy that addresses purging the database, advising citizens proactively that the interaction is voluntary, providing some type of receipt and to eliminating random stops, which are responsible for filling a police database with the names and information of hundreds of thousands of innocent people.

"We have to go right back to the beginning," said Tory, who said the board needed a "fresh" start to develop "something that is going to work and that is going to have the confidence of the public." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

OAK LEAF

Court case shuts steam off at baths

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

A co-owner of the iconic Oak Leaf Steam Baths wants to see the old, rundown hotel and bathhouse renovated and reinvigorated for a new era.

For now, though, the business on Bathurst Street, just north of Queen West, is closed as a legal dispute plays out between co-owners Oleg Korneichuk and Fred Sobie, who recently inherited his father's share of the business.

Both men are aware of skyrocketing property values and new developments in the area, Korneichuk said. But, while Sobie wants to sell, Korneichuk would rather see the spot redeveloped into a boutique hotel and spa.

Korneichuk evicted the people who were living full-time in the upstairs portion — 23 "hotelette" rooms that went for $25 a night with a common bathroom — last month after a court ordered the business could only be open during the daytime.

"They had two days to find a place," Korneichuk said about the clients. "Can you imagine?"

Some told him they'd rather sleep on the street than any other place they could afford in Toronto. Everywhere else, they said, asked for too much money for first and last months' rent.

"Before, they could pay $25, have a steam, sleep and go to work," Korneichuk said.

The court order was issued based on testimony of an undercover investigator, hired by a mediator in the legal dispute, Korneichuk said. The investigator testified he came in on a Friday night in April, was offered sex and drugs and witnessed group sex in the steam room.

Korneichuk thinks the investigator is lying and plans to fight in court when the case resumes in August.

Pipes are calling these birds back to Toronto

WILDLIFE

Piping plovers seen nesting for first time in 80 years

An endangered bird last seen nesting on the shores of Lake Ontario more than 80 years ago has returned to the Toronto Islands.

At least one pair of Great Lakes piping plover was confirmed near Hanlan's Point at the end of May. And since then, avid bird watchers have seen a nest and at least four eggs waiting to hatch.

"There are a number of endangered bird species in Ontario. Whenever you get a chance to see one, you are excited," said Steven Price, president of Bird Studies Canada, a conservation organization. "Never mind the chance to see and confirm a nesting, which means their populations might be on the way back."

In the 1980s, the bird was federally listed as an endangered species, with only 12 known pairs — and continues to be a rare sight in Ontario. Price says a combination of development on beaches and natural predators, such as raccoons and gulls, are probably responsible for the bird's disappearance on the city's shores.

But over the past 10 years, breeding piping plovers have been spotted on Wasaga Beach along Georgian Bay and Sauble Beach on Lake Huron.

With the help of tags, birders have identified that one of the birds nesting in Toronto is from Wasaga Beach, the other from North Manitou Island in Lake Michigan.

Price said the presence of these rare birds has been enough to spur action from all levels of government, who have put up protective signage, fencing and netting around the nesting birds to protect them from predators and curious onlookers.

One of the pairs has started brooding, so the chicks could hatch in as early as two weeks, said Price. And that's when the "risky part" of surviving begins, he said.

"First they have to survive the summer with their chicks here, with the threats of gulls, raccoons and people," he said. "And then they have to make it to the Bahamas or Cuba over the winter, survive that, including the flight back."

"But there is a great hope they will come back."

Feeding Canada's North

RYERSON

Student group combats food scarcity by growing local

A group of Ryerson students will head to Nunavut this summer to build a greenhouse to produce cheaper food for one remote community.

Stefany Nieto and Ben Canning met two years ago and wanted to tackle an issue affecting Canadians.

With two fellow students, they pondered several projects before they came across food scarcity in the North.

Food is hard to come by in Nunavut, especially produce, which arrives via boat or plane. And it's egregiously expensive.

Starvation is therefore a real threat in places such as Repulse Bay, at the Arctic Circle in central Nunavut.

"That's the reality they have to face every day," said Canning, 19. "And Canada is supposedly a developed country. The situation is just baffling."

So they decided to take action, emulating existing programs in Alaska and Sweden.

Last summer, the students said they spoke with 10 per cent of the population of Repulse Bay to do further research. The community loved their idea, and has since donated land for the greenhouse.

Mayor Solomon Malliki is excited about the project.

"This should help. The cost of food is a major problem," he said, adding he spent $13 for four apples just last week.

> The situation is just baffling.
> Ryerson University student Ben Canning

"It would be special if we could eat fresh strawberries and blueberries."

Residents requested potatoes, onions, peppers, cucumbers and tomatoes be grown, but there were also requests for "crazy stuff like mangoes," Canning said.

The plan is to focus on fruits, vegetables and herbs that can be grown with hydroponic technology using nutrient-rich water rather than soil.

The business management students said they managed to raise more than $150,000 through donations from Ryerson, Brookfield Institute and several others, along with a few online funding campaigns.

They are in the process of buying a greenhouse from Growing Spaces, which looks like an igloo made of plastic panels.

The students have grand plans. If their calculations hold true, food will be 50 per cent cheaper.

And they say the non-profit will break even after the first year, adding that if it does, they will look to expand into nearby communities.

"We essentially want to be the healthy McDonald's of the North," Canning said.

"We want to have a greenhouse in every single community in Nunavut to reduce the cost of food.

"If we can't reduce the cost of logistical and transport costs, then let's go ahead and do it locally." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Charity food server faces cash crunch

A local charity offering meals and other services to the community's less fortunate is facing a financial crunch.

Wychwood Open Door has operated in the St. Clair West area for more than 25 years, donating food and offering basic services to people who are homeless and socially isolated. The number of clients has steadily been on the rise in the past few years, leaving the charity concerned it may run out of resources.

"I don't think we hold it as an aspiration to offer more meals every year," said Bh Yael, a board member at the charity and a professor at OCAD. "We are responding to the need, but it is unfortunate that we have grown."

The group says it's now offering more than 15,000 hot meals each year, up from about 11,000 just three years ago.

"It shows that there's a growing precariousness in the community," Yael said.

In an effort to grow its budget, the charity is planning a Friday fundraiser called Cabaret for the Homeless.

It will feature, among others, singers Amanda Martinez, David Wall and Maureen Kennedy, belly dancer Roula Said, classic guitarist Ross Au and magician Dan Trommater.

It runs from 7 to 9:30 p.m. at St. Matthew's United Church (729 St. Clair Ave. W.). GILBERT NGABO/METRO

IN BRIEF

One in hospital, one in custody after stabbing

A man in his 20s is in hospital with serious injuries and his brother is in police custody after an alleged stabbing incident in Brampton.

Peel Regional Police said officers went to a home on Shady Pine Circle on Sunday morning after a caller reported a confrontation between two brothers in their 20s.

Police said one of the brothers suffered stab wounds and was transported to a trauma unit where he was in serious but stable condition.

The unnamed suspect was in custody but police said he was not charged as investigators were waiting for an update on the alleged victim's condition in addition to reviewing his statement.

Police said the incident was not a random event and emphasize there was no concern for public safety. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Splash pad 'over the deep end'

CABBAGETOWN

Wellesley Park development irking residents

Jessica Smith Cross
Metro | Toronto

A new Cabbagetown splash pad has sparked an all-out war of words, with one man calling it "brash," "loud" and "over the deep end."

It is the "water equivalent of a mini-putt," says resident Stephen Poulin.

He's not alone. Others are up in arms about the development going up in Wellesley Park because they don't think it matches the neighbourhood's historic feel.

Of particular concern is a blue tent that will shade the area and add to its "Cirque-de-Soleil like" feel.

Poulin's made his feeling known — writing a "ranting" letter to Heritage Toronto. There's also a petition circulating to document concerns.

Stephen O'Bright, supervisor of capital projects with the city's parks, forestry and recreation department, said he's aware people are upset.

The splash pad is being built to replace the park's "tired old worn wading pool," he said. The city has been negotiating with the community for more than two years — going to great lengths to meet special requests.

The blue tent that's sparked so much concern was born from one of the requests. Residents originally wanted it to be a large, custom-made butterfly, "but it was just cost prohibitive," O'Bright said.

The colour of the shade structure will be changed to green so it blends better with the trees, O'Bright said.

Job law 'signals new era'

LEGISLATION

Bill could help groups who are 'often left out'

Ontario's new infrastructure legislation, passed this week, is a ground-breaking opportunity to help at-risk youth and other disadvantaged groups get well-paying construction jobs, local community groups say.

The law, which will guide $130 billion in new provincial infrastructure construction over the next 10 years, includes a framework for so-called "community benefits agreements" that will require companies bidding on the projects to hire workers through local apprenticeship programs and provide other neighbourhood improvements.

Such agreements are common in large-scale public and private-sector developments in cities across the United States. But it is the first time in North America that a provincial or state government has passed legislation in the area.

"This is a huge step forward for community benefits in Ontario and in North America," said Steve Shallhorn, chair of the Toronto Community Benefits Network, a group of labour and local social service agencies.

Workers manoeuvering sections of tunnel along Eglinton Ave. for the Eglinton Crosstown light rail transit line in April 2014. Now there is a framework for asking companies bidding on infrastructure projects to hire from local apprenticeship programs. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

> The proof will be in the pudding. Anything that gets us local jobs, for local youth in particular, is a great thing.
> NDP MP Mike Sullivan

"It gives a very strong message to the construction sector that working with community is an expectation that can easily be met," he added.

The legislation was inspired by a community benefits framework for the $5.3 billion Eglinton Crosstown light-rail transit line, hammered out over the past several years between Metrolinx and Shallhorn's group.

Bidders on the second phase of the Crosstown project, which includes building the tracks, stations, signaling and other operating systems, were required to include a plan for apprenticeship training, local hiring and the use of local suppliers for goods and services. The winning construction consortium is expected to be announced this summer.

"What's new about this bill is that it actually names specific groups that are often left out of opportunities like this — at-risk youth, low-income communities, aboriginal populations and people with disabilities," said Pedro Barata, vice-president of communications for United Way Toronto.

"Linking infrastructure projects with community benefits signals a new era of collaboration bringing the goals of government, labour, not-for-profits and business closer together," he added.

United Way President Susan McIsaac says the legislation will help "build new lasting bonds across our divided city."

TEACHERS

Strikes could happen this fall

Ontario's teacher unions say work-to-rule, followed by one-day or rotating strikes, will happen this fall if no collective agreements are worked out between now and the start of school.

Leaders of the four teacher unions — representing public elementary and secondary teachers, Catholic and French — met Thursday night in downtown Toronto to map out possible coordinated job action, as all are expected to be in strike position by September.

James Ryan, president of the Ontario English Catholic Teachers' Association, said that while final details have to be worked out with his union executive, a work-to-rule is likely to start off any job action and escalate from there. He also warned there's not a lot of time to reach deals because bargaining will be slow come summer.

"Could we be negotiating part of the summer? Yes. The entire summer? No."

METRO'S PSYCHIC SAYS: CRUNCH TIME FOR GARDINER

Card of Death adds unusual twist to debate

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

The so-called hybrid option for the Gardiner Expressway isn't in the cards, says Tara Greene.

Asked by Metro how this week's vote on the Gardiner will go, Greene, a Toronto psychic and tarot card reader, said city council will defy Mayor John Tory and opt to remove the eastern portion of the roadway.

"One of the cards that came up was the Card of Death," Greene said. "Which means that old structures will come down."

Based on the tarot reading, Greene predicted the decision to remove the Gardiner will "rebalance the power between east and west" in Toronto by opening up east end land for development opportunities.

Greene also believes the vote on the Gardiner's fate will be very tight and could possibly be deferred until a later date.

Tory has advocated for the hybrid option, which would maintain the Gardiner as is, while re-locating some on-ramps.

If Greene is correct, it will be the mayor's first major defeat since taking office. However, Greene predicted Tory will emerge from the fray with his reputation intact.

"He's in good energies this year," Greene said. "He'll be thought of as a hero by some people."

50/50

Greene's recent forecasts have been 50 per cent accurate.

In 2013 she incorrectly predicted the Leafs would beat the Bruins in the playoffs and that the Blue Jays would make the post-season — neither happened.

MAC 'N CHEESE FESTIVAL

Big mess left after event

Organizers of Canada's first Mac 'n Cheese Festival are apologizing for long lines and a memorably cheesy mess afterward.

Event organizer Philip Suos, of Vaulted Studios, said they were simply unprepared for the number of people who attended the event in Liberty Village. By Sunday Suos estimated 46,000 had attended the event.

Liberty Village residents and festival attendees complained about the mess left behind Sunday morning. "If" there were trash cans, they were overflowing, said Donna, an employee of a nearby restaurant.

The three-day festival featured 23 Toronto chefs competing to make the best gourmet mac and cheese. It raised funds for FoodShare Toronto, a non-profit that works to improve access to affordable and healthy food.

Suos said he arrived at 5 a.m. Sunday to ensure the area was clean before the event began.

He added that he would stay into the early hours of Monday to ensure the cleanup was complete. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Historic Riverside Bridge finally shines with 78 lights

It took three years, about $600,000 and nearly 4,000 emails, but the Riverside District BIA wasn't going to take plans to illuminate the neighbourhood hallmark lightly.

Over the decades, countless streetcars have trundled over the beloved Riverside Bridge. And untold thousands of residents have passed under its gateway, which since 1996 has borne the motto, "This river I step in is not the river I stand in."

During evenings, the prose rested above a clock face that gently glowed. But in 2015, the BIA decided it was time for the Queen Street bridge to truly shine.

On Friday night the bridge displayed its new illuminated décor, awash in 78 bright, Pan Am Games-coloured lights.

The project, a private-public partnership with several sponsors, including Streetcar Developments — which is also revitalizing the historic Broadview Hotel nearby — was more than a way to put a spotlight on an enduring landmark, said BIA member Perry Lupyrypa. It was also an opportunity to celebrate the structure that has long linked the downtown core with the east end.

Built in 1911 and known originally as the Queen Street Viaduct, the truss-style steel structure had an open but simple design.

Until Eldon Garnet rolled out the inscription and neighbouring art pieces in 1996, the bridge never really felt like a gateway, said the "west-end guy" behind its artwork.

When Garnet won the contest to decorate it, the bridge yearned for sprucing-up and a way to make a statement.

Back then, he recalled, the community at Queen Street E. and Bayview Avenue "wasn't in that great condition" and "the east was kind of derelict." He helped change that.

"I make the joke that I made the art and the neighbourhood cleaned up. It was gentrification, in a way," he said. "I took it and made it into a landmark and elevated it to a neighbourhood icon." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Every animal gets adopted in Humane Society event

Sara Allen named her dog Murphy. As in Murphy's Law. Because anything that could go wrong already had for the golden retriever.

Murphy was abandoned in a Toronto neighbourhood, left tied to a tree. She had just given birth and was underweight. She arrived at the Toronto Humane Society shelter in bad shape.

"She came to us from such a bad state and she has completely changed our lives already," said Allen.

The 29-year-old dental hygienist from Bradford was one of hundreds of people who adopted more than 600 animals over the weekend in the Toronto Humane Society's three-day Mega-Pet Adoption event, which drew massive line-ups and crowds.

The event was so successful that all the dogs were adopted on the first day, and the rest of the animals had been adopted by Saturday. Which meant the society closed shop on Sunday, leaving many would-be owners disappointed.

"It was really great to see that people are understanding that animals in shelters are wonderful. I was just sorry we couldn't accommodate everyone," said Barbara Steinhoff, executive director of the Toronto Humane Society.

Allen was the first to line up at 7 a.m. Friday, driving in from Bradford to the Queen Elizabeth Building at Exhibition Place.

The doors weren't to open until 10 a.m., but an improbable line-up of more than 500 people soon started to form.

Allen already knew she wanted Murphy. She had seen a news clip about someone who found her, abandoned. When the gates opened, she ran for the cages where the dogs were kept. Murphy licked her hand.

When Steinhoff saw the line, she knew her animals had finally found a home.

"We did have some animals in the shelter that had been there a long time that didn't find a perfect match. It really tugs at your heart. But it was great to see that they finally found someone to care for them."

The long queue marks something of a breakthrough in the way shelter pets are traditionally viewed, said Steinhoff. The stigma isn't quite there anymore.

"I think people are understanding that these are beautiful animals and they are looking for a home," she said.

This is the second year of the event. Pet owners pay a one-time adoption fee of $25 — considerably cheaper than the average price of adoption. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

If you're working hard these days without enough to show for it, I understand. I used to work hard myself – the 18-hour days – the 7-day weeks. I was a struggling musician – a concert pianist – trying to provide for my 4 kids in Montreal. I got married at 18 and had those 4 kids by the time I was 23, and I wound up a stay-at-home dad (not by choice!). But I never made real money until I discovered the secrets of investing successfully in US real estate – and then I was able to work a lot less.

Once my friends saw how well I was doing, they all wanted to get involved. It's funny – for 6 long struggling years, I had no friends, I was the crazy "black sheep" of the family who always needed to get a REAL job, and suddenly, they were all asking ME for advice!

I'm a Canadian, just like you, and a national expert in the field of easily acquiring income generating properties in the United States, and a Multi-Millionaire as well – and now I want to help you out of the rat race forever!

"I will make more money this year than I have made over the last five years. After attending this free training, I've found 7 properties thats a total of 14 doors tht will give me $8,000 per month after expenses."

"I failed at Real Estate by myself, but with this amazing multi-millionaire's help I'm closing on 6 properties and I will have a net cash flow of over $6,000 per month."

"I bought my first house for $170,000 and now it's up for sale for over $220,000. I will make almost $50,000 when it closess."

WHAT IT OFFERS

The long road to Rio

The Pan American Games are the world's third largest multi-sport event, surpassed only by the Summer Olympics and the Asian Games.

The inaugural Pan Am Games were in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1951. Since then, the Games have been played every four years in cities ranging from Chicago to Havana. This is the third time Canada has been the host nation. Winnipeg hosted the Games twice — in both 1967 and 1999.

This year, athletes from 41 countries are competing.

Although Pan Am has often struggled with its reputation as a second-tier sporting event, the Games' chef de mission, former Olympic and Pan Am cycling medalist Curt Harnett, says the competition will be high in Toronto.

"These Games are direct qualifiers for the Summer Olympics in Rio de Janeiro," he said. "The road to Rio goes through Toronto." Luke Simcoe/Metro

WHY IT MATTERS

Nine reasons everyone should care about Pan Am

1 As a result of the Games, roughly $700 million has been spent on sporting infrastructure alone in Southern Ontario. Much of that investment has occurred in Toronto.

2 When else will you get a chance to watch roller figure skating?

3 With roughly 725 Canadian athletes participating, the Games mark the largest Canadian team ever assembled for a multi-sport event, including the Olympics. It's a great chance to cheer some homegrown talent.

4 The Games are expected to generate upwards of $3 billion in economic activity for Ontario and create 26,000 new jobs.

5 With athletes from more than 40 countries visiting Toronto, these Games are a great opportunity to showcase — and enhance — our city's multicultural reputation.

Pan Am competitor Kaliah Macri. THE CANADIAN PRESS

6 Two words: Live sport. Whether it's boxing or bowling, the speed, skill and power of sport is always better in person.

7 Three words: Did we mention 'roller figure skating'?

8 A Flaming Lips concert is pretty much always a good time. They'll perform a free concert July 19 at Nathan Phillips Square.

9 It's a chance to try an alternative commute. With traffic congestion expected to balloon during the Games, the city's official transit policy boils down to: Walk, bike or take the TTC to work. Luke Simcoe/Metro

Harper pushes for trade pact with EU

ECONOMY

PM talked up agreement at G7 summit

Prime Minister Stephen Harper used Sunday's opening of the G7 summit to push European leaders to ratify the comprehensive Canada-EU free trade agreement.

Harper's office said he talked up the trade pact at the G7's first working session of the day on the fragile global economy.

"Prime Minister Harper encouraged European members of the G7 to swiftly implement the job-creating Canada-EU trade agreement," his office said in a statement.

Harper met European Council President Donald Tusk, and the European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker, where he was expected to push the deal.

Canada and the EU have an agreement in principle on a sweeping pact in goods and services, but the legal text still must be finished so it can be ratified by Canada and the EU's 28-member countries.

Ratifying the pact, known as CETA, would be a major political win for Harper with the planned Oct. 19 federal election looming. Harper used a meeting with German Chancellor Angela Merkel to push for CETA's ratification.

Harper also met with British Prime Minister David Cameron, and they discussed the need to grow the fragile global economy as well as addressing two of the world's leading security issues: the crisis between Russia and Ukraine and the fight against the Islamic militants in Iraq and Syria, said his office.

They emphasized the need for Russian President Vladimir Putin to honour the Minsk peace agreement that was seriously undermined by a renewed outbreak of violence in eastern Ukraine this week.

Harper arrived in Germany's scenic and mountainous Bavarian region for the G7 after stopping in Kyiv and assuring Ukrainian leaders that he would push for solutions to their ongoing conflict with Russia.

Naked Canadians blamed for quake

The Department of Foreign Affairs says it is assisting two Canadians barred from leaving Malaysia, amid reports that the pair could be charged after allegedly posing naked atop the country's highest peak.

Spokesman Nicolas Doire says the department is aware they have been prevented from leaving the country. Malaysia's foreign affairs ministry identified them as Lindsey Petersen and his sister Danielle Petersen.

A magnitude 5.9 earthquake on Friday sent rocks raining down the trekking routes on Mount Kinabalu in eastern Sabah state on Borneo island.

Sabah Deputy Chief Minister Joseph Pairin Kitingan blamed the tragedy on a group of 10 foreigners who "showed disrespect to the sacred mountain" by posing naked at the peak last week. He said a special ritual would be conducted later to "appease the mountain spirit." Officials have said a group of foreigners — including two Canadians — broke away from their entourage and stripped naked before taking photos at the mountain peak on May 30. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IN BRIEF

Mulcair promises cities more money from gas tax

NDP Leader Tom Mulcair is promising Canada's cities an extra penny from the gas tax.

Mulcair told the Federation of Canadian Municipalities convention in Edmonton Saturday that an NDP government would provide an extra $1.5 billion each year for roads, bridges and other infrastructure through the existing gas tax by the end of its first term. He also promised an NDP transit plan would see $1.3 billion invested each year over 20 years, and said there will be incentives for the construction of affordable homes.

Visitors pay respects to Parizeau

Quebec's legislature opened its doors on Sunday to allow citizens to pay their last respects to former premier Jacques Parizeau, one of its most famous representatives.

The funeral procession, led by Parizeau's widow Lisette Lapointe, arrived just before 10 a.m. after which the Fleur-de-lis draped coffin was brought into the large hall, transformed into a funeral parlour for the day.

This was the second day of public visitations for Parizeau, who died last week.

The event attracted long lineups of dignitaries and citizens alike. By mid-afternoon hundreds of people had viewed the casket and offered their condolences to Lapointe and other members of Parizeau's family.

Among the dignitaries, Parti Québécois leader Pierre Karl Peladeau visited Parizeau's casket for a second day in a row. Speaking to reporters, he highlighted Parizeau's role in creating the provincial pension fund manager and state-run investment company, and said he gave "hope" to the people of Quebec.

EUROPE

Veterans to bike battlefields

A group of veterans, soldiers and their supporters are preparing to bike across the battlefields of Europe to remember the sacrifices of the past and help the wounded soldiers of today.

In mid-June, almost 100 participants in the second annual Battlefield Bike Ride, organized by Wounded Warriors Canada, will gather at the Canadian National Vimy Memorial in northern France for the ceremonial kickoff of their journey.

Over the next seven days and 550 kilometres, the riders will head north into Belgium, across First World War battlefields, then into the Netherlands, retracing the steps of Canadian soldiers who fought through the Scheldt estuary during the Second World War. The ride will end at the Groesbeek Canadian War Cemetery, near Nijmegen, which holds the graves of 2,338 Canadians killed during battles that helped pushed the Nazis out of the Netherlands.

David Warren, a former military chaplain, calls the ride his "retirement challenge" and said he's going on the trip to remember — and raise money.

Police comb border after prison break

NEW YORK STATE

Officials worried men may try to enter Canada

The brother of a slain sheriff's deputy had forgotten the names of those involved in the killing more than a decade ago. Then came a daring prison break: Two convicted murderers hid dummies in their beds and used power tools to cut their way to freedom.

The cunning escape from an upstate New York prison on Saturday had hundreds of local, state and federal law enforcement officers searching for one of the deputy's killers and another man imprisoned for dismembering his boss.

Richard Matt and David Sweat staged what Gov. Andrew Cuomo called "a really elaborate, sophisticated operation" that ended at a manhole cover blocks away from the prison.

Richard Matt. NEW YORK STATE POLICE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

David Sweat. NEW YORK STATE POLICE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The men had filled their beds inside the Clinton Correctional Facility with clothes to appear as though they were sleeping, cut into steel steam pipes and shimmied out of the prison. On one pipe cut in the escape, investigators found a note with a crude Asian caricature along with the words, "Have a nice day."

Sweat, 34, is serving a sentence of life without parole after he was convicted of first-degree murder for killing a sheriff's deputy in Broome County, New York, on July 4, 2002. Matt, 48, is serving a sentence of 25 years to life for the kidnapping, dismemberment and killing of his former boss in 1997.

CTV News reported that officials believe the men may try to enter Canada through Ontario or Quebec. Alerts have been broadcast to police in the Greater Toronto Area.

Steven Tarsia, brother of Deputy Kevin Tarsia, said finding out his brother's killer had escaped "turns your world upside-down all over again."

He said just the other day, he had been trying to remember the names of the men responsible for his brother's death, and "I couldn't remember their names."

"All of a sudden, I remember them again," he said.

Roadblocks were set up in the area around the village of Dannemora, which is about 30 kilometres from the Canadian border, and bloodhounds and helicopters were being used to track down the men, officials said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Key backer touts seal penis sales

EAST COAST SEAL HUNT

Fur Institute sees Asian buyers as main target market

Sales of Canadian seal products could get a lift if the federal Fisheries Department adopts a plan that, among other things, calls for the revival of the controversial seal penis trade, a key supporter of the East Coast seal hunt says.

The report, drafted by the Fur Institute of Canada, is aimed at creating new markets to support an earlier proposal to kill 140,000 grey seals over five years in the southern Gulf of St. Lawrence — 70 per cent of the grey seals that frequent the area.

Fishermen have long complained that a growing population of grey seals is to blame for eating too many commercially valuable fish, which has resulted in repeated calls for a cull.

The Fur Institute says its five-year plan, dated March 2014, focuses on creating markets for a number of products that could be derived using every part of the seal carcass.

"The penises of juvenile and adult animals may be dried and sold as sexual enhancement products, particularly to Asian buyers," says the report, obtained through the Access to Information Act.

"Asian consumers, particularly athletes, also consume a beverage called Dalishen Oral Liquid that is made from seal penis and testicles, which they believe to be energizing and performance-enhancing."

Officials at the Fisheries Department declined an interview, but said in an emailed response that they were considering the report.

Dion Dakins, chairman of the committee that wrote the study, said the decision to develop a market for seal penises stems from the belief that no parts of the carcass should be wasted.

"What the proposal does is it provides a 100 per cent utilization of the animal, recognizing that seal organs — sexual or non-sexual — do have market value," he said. "The Fur Institute ignores any industry proponents (supporting) … the harvest of seals just for the penises."

The Fur Institute's plan calls for a squad of five fishing boats carrying a total of 40 hunters to kill seals for nine months of the year.

The study says the hunters could be equipped with Beretta 9 mm semi-automatic rifles with silencers. The use of silencers, needed to prevent spooking the animals, would require legislative changes, as such equipment is banned in Canada.

The total cost of implementing the plan would be around $9 million, assuming buyers could be found to pay up to $4 million in the first year for about 70,000 carcasses.

The sale of Canadian seal penises hasn't attracted headlines since the late 1990s when the International Fund for Animal Welfare filed a lawsuit against the federal Fisheries minister, claiming the trade was the most cruel aspect of the seal hunt. At the time, the penises were being sold for up to $650 each. The market shrivelled after Viagra appeared on the scene, though a much smaller market still exists.

MINING

Coveralls rock fashion show

Alicia Woods' "eureka" small business idea came via the call of nature a mile underground touring a Sudbury nickel mine 15 years ago. "I thought, 'Uh-oh, what if I have to use the washroom?'," she recalls.

Then, about four years ago, she was in a potash mine in Saskatchewan and had to make an embarrassing trip to the loo that took far longer than the men because she had to remove the full safety outfit.

Covergalls was born soon after, when she found a seamstress to put together a sample design of women's coveralls, with wrist snaps, adjustable Velcro at the waist and two-way zippers to fit various sizes — and of course a secret trap door for when nature calls.

Though women make up only 17 per cent of the staff in the Canadian mining sector today, or 46,000 people, her research told her those who work hands-on as miners, geologists and engineers tend to buy several pairs of coveralls at a time, a few times a year.

Covergalls will be front and centre at the Women Who Rock mining fashion show Monday night at the Art Gallery of Ontario in Toronto.

The first-annual Hard Hats and High Heels event will bring together the Canadian fashion industry and women of the mining industry — many of whom are part of the Women Who Rock informal networking organization, whose goal is to empower women who work in the industry.

Voters can find virtue in a change of heart

CRUNCH TIME FOR GARDINER

Matt Elliott

Picture this:

After weeks of turbulent debate over the future of the Gardiner Expressway, Mayor John Tory steps up to his podium and announces he's changed his mind.

Picture the mayor explaining that after listening to the experts and reviewing the case studies from other cities, he's come to see the wisdom of replacing the section of elevated expressway between Jarvis Street and the Don Valley Parkway with a more affordable boulevard.

Imagine Tory announcing, as an alternative to maintaining the elevated expressway, that he will invest in cost-effective transportation infrastructure.

To pay for it, he could use the savings achieved by not pursuing the expensive "hybrid" option for the Gardiner, plus revenues from waterfront land sales that can only be fully achieved if this part of the Gardiner is removed.

Some of the money could be spent on world-leading technology for dynamic traffic signal synchronization for the intersections along the new boulevard.

The rest could go to transit improvements, including an accelerated first phase of Tory's SmartTrack plan, with frequent regular-fare service on the existing GO Transit corridor between Union and Danforth stations.

He could promise to fast-track construction of new SmartTrack stops, with one serving the new West Don Lands neighbourhood and another serving the Unilever factory site east of the Don River.

Done right, the plan could ensure that some new transit is in place before that stretch of the Gardiner comes down.

But, of course, unless something extraordinary happens between now and Toronto city council's meeting on Wednesday, none of this is going to happen.

Over the last week, even as experts, developers and former mayors have lined up to tell him he's wrong, Tory has been unwavering in his support for keeping the elevated expressway connection.

But if he wasn't — if Tory was willing to change his mind — would voters judge him harshly? Would they deem him a ditherer? A flip-flopper? I don't think so.

On the contrary, as long as they come with rational explanations, voters can and do find virtue in a reversal of position. Done right, a timely shift from an elected official shows willingness to adapt and listen — to get beyond rigid ideology.

That's what former Ontario premier Bill Davis showed when he led his cabinet in 1971 to withdraw support for the Spadina Expressway.

Decades later, it's still his most defining moment.

Though the stakes are different now, Tory could follow in those same legacy-making footsteps. He doesn't need to feel locked in to his established position. He's got a chance to build something more enduring than a couple of kilometres of elevated highway. It starts with a change of heart.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD

metroview

"We ... builders of cities, expect to feel safe from wildlife."

You haven't known fear until you've been dive-bombed by a crow.

You haven't known terror until you've run down the street, arms covering your head, yelping with every brush of black wings.

We, humans, builders of cities, expect to feel safe from wildlife on the streets, because we own them.

But crows own the skies.

Sophia Lindgren in Vancouver understands this, having been repeatedly attacked two springs in a row. It's nesting season again, and it's as if the crows have marked her.

"It goes back and forth and goes, 'Caw! Caw!'" she told Metro Vancouver last week, "and it kind of swoops right over my head, and sometimes it scratches me."

I know the feeling, Sophia.

I spent one spring in Victoria cowed by the crows along my route to work. I used an umbrella as a shield, unsure if the bun on my head was the problem, or if I had somehow offended them.

Crows, after all, don't dive for nothing. They're highly intelligent. They can use tools and speak to each other — one in Manitoba can even speak a few words in English. They can reason at the level of a seven-year-old. They are said to remember people's faces, for good or ill, for years.

Maybe Sophia or I scowled at one once, and never knew the impact. More likely, we were seen as a threat to the fledgling crows.

Ravens, the majestic cousins of the crow, don't bring the same terror. Solitary and aloof, they don't interfere with our sense of urban dominance.

We don't see them chatting and circling overhead with their brethren. They don't flock in the tens of thousands like the crows over Burnaby do. They don't cover whole neighbourhoods, as crows did in Halifax last year.

There are tens of millions of crows across the U.S. and Canada, and researchers say their populations are rising in cities, where food is plentiful.

Crows easily adapt to urban environments and "will eat anything they can get their beaks on," said Derek Matthews, founder of the Vancouver Avian Research Centre, a man keen to redeem the "villain" crow.

When they attack, they're only protecting their young, he said with compassion.

But we, in our cities, see another threat. Here, more than anywhere, we want to control nature.

Crows, swooping, calling, smart and unpredictable, remind us that we cannot.

Our cement fortresses are not impenetrable. Even here, we can be hunted.

FAMILY BUDGET

How to rein in the high cost of keeping children busy

Megan Haynes
For Metro | Life

As parents brace for the end of school, many are feeling the pressure of the high cost of keeping kids entertained over the summer, a new report from TD Canada finds. Indeed, 56 per cent said they consider the additional cost of summer activities like camps, classes, sports programs, day trips and family vacations stressful.

The study, which surveyed 6,100 Canadians, found 71 per cent of parents expect to pay up to $999 per child for these extra costs, while 10 per cent plan to spend more than $1,500 per child, says Linda Mackay, senior vice-president, retail savings and investing at TD.

Many will dip into their savings (11 per cent), charge to their credit cards (13 per cent) or try to cut back on other expenses (26 per cent) in order to cover the additional cost, the report found.

This year, parents who didn't plan ahead will get a bit of a reprieve, Mackay says, as the universal child care benefit was expanded in the federal budget. The new program dishes out $160 a month per child for kids under six, and $60 per month per child for those between six and 17 (as opposed to the previous program that handed out $100 only to kids under six). And it's retroactive to January, she says, which means parents who have signed up for the universal child care benefit can expect a bigger cheque in the mail in July.

A day at the zoo for a family of four adds up to approximately $100. ISTOCK

Carol Wong-Li, a senior lifestyle analyst at research company Mintel, recently studied consumer-spending habits. She says Canadians generally, and parents in particular, want to reduce their spending in 2015 opting to focus on costs that will reduce their stress, such as mortgage or credit card debt.

As a result, parents want to cut back on their leisure and entertainment spending.

"When you're a family of four, and you're buying four tickets for something, it's automatically the ticket price times four," she says. For example, tickets to the Toronto Zoo will cost two parents and two kids nearly $100, before food and drink.

Wong-Li says parents should hunt for free outdoor festivals as alternatives to paid attractions or programs. She suggested talking to both online and offline social networks to ask other parents for advice on free activities (and she reminds people it's give-and-take: share your own free alternatives).

"Parents spend more on home care items, like cooking products and tissue paper, than the average Canadian," she says.

Looking for sales and deals on household products might be one way to free up some cash to pay for children's activities.

For forward-looking people, Mackay says the simplest solution to help ease the stress is to put aside a little bit of money each month — even $20 per paycheque — to help alleviate the financial burdens of the summer months. She says automated savings programs are a simple way to do this.

She also suggests taking advantage of early registration for activities, saying many programs offer discounted rates. "It's a bit late now, but (parents) can make a calendar reminder for January or February (2016) to check for early bird pricing for next year's summer activities," she says.

DEBT

Take control of your money by taking stock of what you owe

MONEY MATTERS
Gail Vaz-Oxlade
gailvazoxlade.com

Canadians are carrying $1.8 trillion in debt. How much of that is yours? ISTOCK; PHOTO ILLUSTRATION BY METRO

I'm making quite the reputation drumming home some very common-sense ideas about money. Unfortunately as common sense as these rules may be, there are a lot of people for whom these rules are not obvious. I meet people who are spending money on credit and not paying it off in full every month and I scratch my head. Part of the problem comes from how we think about debt. We tend to keep it in little piles that make us feel we can manage it, no problem. When we're forced to add it all together, we freak out and then we're paralyzed by dread.

How much debt do you think Canadians are carrying in total?

- $5.5 billion
- $10.9 billion
- $76.9 billion
- $1.2 trillion
- $1.8 trillion

Canadian household debt hit $1.8 trillion — yes that's "trillion" with a T. To put it in perspective, we Canadians are carrying more debt than Europeans or Americans at the peak of their credit bubble.

When we hear how dire things are going to be, often we think to ourselves, "Well, I can't do anything about that." Or we think, "I'm screwed." Or we think, "I don't know what to do." And what we often feel is a rising sense of panic. We don't know what to do. We don't know if we will be OK or not. And our not knowing makes us feel out of control. So we feel scared. And we feel sad. And we feel powerless to do anything to change our picture.

Staying with a pessimistic I'm-not-in-charge approach means you will never take control of your money. If this is the way you've been thinking, it's time to change how you think.

The first thing to wrap your head around is how big your debt really is.

Grab a pen right now and scribble down a list of who you owe and how much. You've seen me work with people on TV. As part of the stuff they have to send me, they must make a list of their debt, what they used it for, and the interest rate they're paying. Then I can analyze their finances.

I bet if you lent someone at work $60 and it was due back Tuesday, you'd be banking on getting that money back. Yet when it is we who owe the money, we seem all too willing to play loosey-goosey with the info. So people routinely fill out those forms with numbers they just pluck from the air. How's your list coming? Almost done?

People usually have no trouble coming up with the usual suspects for their list of debts: mortgage, credit cards, line of credit, department store cards, student loans. Did you include your car loan or car lease? If you write that car off tomorrow, you're still on the hook for the money you owe. Yeah, insurance will cover some of it, but maybe not all. It's a debt.

How about that buy-now-pay-later financing for that snappy new furniture? It may not be due yet, but it's still debt. And if you don't have it paid off in full by the due date, the interest rate — usually somewhere way up high — clicks in retroactively to the day you took home that comfy new couch. That can raise your true cost up by as much as 50 per cent.

Did you use the RRSP Home Buyers' Plan for the down payment on your home? That has to be repaid. It's debt. Have you tapped your family or your friends for money? Don't forget them.

And here's my favourite. The debt most people leave off their list: overdraft. I'm not talking about the overdraft you have access to, I'm talking about the overdraft you're using. If your bank account is in negative territory, that is DEBT, so add it to your list.

Listen, I know it's easier to think of what you owe in smaller pieces. You owe $800 on a credit card and $1,600 on a line of credit, and you still owe $12,000 on a student loan. Oh, and there's the $700 on that department store card. Plus the $650 on overdraft. But keeping it in your little piles is helping you avoid your reality. And it's easy to think that your home's increased value more than offsets your debt. But if house prices fall (which all assets can), the debt doesn't go away, so you'll be left wearing concrete-debt boots.

As long as you haven't yet faced how big your debt is, you'll continue to delude yourself into thinking you don't have to do anything about it. The only way to get to a better place financially is to tell the truth. Add it up. Face your reality. Know your truth. Then you can get busy taking steps to fix being broke!

PETER THIEL FELLOWSHIP

They're taking $100K to ditch school and chase their dreams

A group of young Canadians are leaving school with cheques in hand to kick-start technology-oriented business ventures.

"I'm very excited," Mississauga native Cathy Tie told Torstar News Service on Friday. The 19-year-old is leaving the University of Toronto after only one semester to develop a company that seeks to improve the accuracy of genetic testing.

"I think the Thiel Fellowship is a great program," she said.

Tie is one of four Canadians to win this year's Peter Thiel Fellowship, an annual program that offers $100,000 US in funding and two years' worth of mentorship to 20 young entrepreneurs willing to drop out of school to focus on their fledgling businesses.

"The mission of the fellowship is to empower young people to take an alternate path in bringing a great idea into the world," says Jack Abraham, the fellowship's executive director.

"There is an alternate path to college, and in some ways, if you choose to take that path — which not everyone will or can — it can actually lead to more learning than you would get even in the university system."

The program, founded in 2010 by billionaire PayPal co-founder Peter Thiel, has offered 80 fellowships to date.

"The world has seen such a tremendous amount of improvement from people who have chosen to drop out of college and start companies, whether that's Bill Gates, Mark Zuckerberg, Larry Page or Sergey Brin," Abraham says.

Chosen from a pool of more than 2,800 applications — more than four times the number received last year — all of the Canadian winners are under the age of 22.

The other Canadian winners are: Simon Tian of Montreal; Harry Gandhi of Waterloo, Ont.; and Liam Horne of Cambridge, Ont. Tian has founded a company that designs wearable technology to help people perform day-to-day tasks. Gandhi is developing contact lenses that can monitor glucose levels in diabetics. Home has co-founded Piinpoint: a software company that aims to help retailers set up shop in the right location by analyzing demographic details, traffic patterns and spending habits.

"It's going to give us peace of mind to know that Piinpoint, and myself, can just go about doing what we're doing," Horne told The Canadian Press on Friday.

In a statement announcing this year's winners, Thiel noted that, "college can be good for learning about what's been done before, but it can also discourage young people from doing something new, especially when it leaves them in debt."

Vying for the boss's eye

Mirroring the boss's favourite can be an opportunity to learn the habits of the highly successful. ISTOCK

ADVICE

Combat office favouritism by stepping up

OFFICE RELATIONS
Eleni Deacon

Even the fairest bosses sometimes play favourites. And while it's natural for managers to click with some colleagues better than others, their preferences can cause tension. Being the boss's go-to can mean higher-profile projects, after-work perks or even first-in-line access to a promotion. For the favourite, it's great. But less-loved employees can feel unappreciated and invisible.

If your manager exhibits in-everyone's-face favouritism, don't blame the object of their affection. Although it may take some painful self-appraisal, it's worth questioning why Katie was chosen to attend that conference while you were stuck at your desk. Your boss might be swooning for personal reasons — maybe she and Katie share similar interests or sense of humour — but it's also possible that Katie does the best job.

Focus on improving your own performance, rather than obsessing over someone else. What are the behaviours that make your boss's bestie shine brighter than the rest? Maybe it's their attitude. Maybe they're reliable. Or maybe they revamp tired administrative processes with creative new ideas. Once you identify the qualities that make the favourite exceptional, see if you can incorporate elements of their style into your work. To make your boss see you in an equally stellar light, don't hate — emulate.

It's more complicated if favouritism is the result of abstract social connections.

No matter how much overtime you commit, you may never share as many giggles with your superior. It's not wrong for your boss to have a bud. But if it's a bud-with-benefits, especially professional pluses like bonuses or off-the-book vacation days, it's worth attempting a tactful chat.

When meeting with your manager, avoid trashing their current No. 1.

> To make your boss see you in an equally stellar light, don't hate — emulate.

Instead, voice your own aspirations. Pitch your wishes — more opportunities, more communication — and ask how you can reach these goals. It might be tempting (and justified) to call out their favouritism, but articulating your ambitions will likely be more effective than airing your grievances. At the very least, a one-on-one conversation will bring you closer to your superior.

While recognition is important to workplace satisfaction, don't let frustration over favouritism become a distraction. Build a strong track record. You may not be their darling, but you'll still earn their respect.

VIRTUAL FRIENDS

Pillow talk: Embracing new tech

What's shaped like your friend and sounds like your friend, but isn't really your friend? A body pillow with a slot in its head for a cellphone, of course.

The Hugvie, which has a head, a torso and short limbs — think Casper the Friendly Ghost, but without facial features — is the result of a collaboration between robot engineers, a futon vendor and a textile firm.

Users put their phone inside the Hugvie when making call, and then embrace it.

Engineers at the Advanced Telecommunications Research Institute International (ATR) said they worked under the principle that people feel closer to whomever they are speaking with when two or more senses are engaged, such as hearing and touch.

The Hugvie will sell for 10,000 yen ($80) in Japan when it goes on sale in September. AFP

Fear through Insidious means

CHAPTER 3

Director Leigh Scott explains the methods to his madness

Stefanie Scott — who plays an aspiring actress named Quinn — stars in Insidious: Chapter 3. CONTRIBUTED

Insidious: Chapter 3 writer-director Leigh Whannell employed some rather unique methods to get his cast into terror mode.

On set, he used an air horn to scare the actors, and with star Stefanie Scott, he cranked up some screechy music to "prod her into this darker place."

"I would lock her in a closet and make her listen to death metal," Whannell said in an interview.

"I'm not talking about Metallica here. I was making her listen to Norwegian stuff. It's just like one note. These songs go for like 13 minutes ... I kept her locked in there for a good hour.

"I did spot checks, like a prison guard coming in to do random cell checks. I'd rip her headphones off and made sure she hadn't turned the volume down, and she was a trouper."

Whannell wrote the first two films in the hit supernatural horror franchise and decided to make his directorial debut on the third, which opened Friday, because it was something he'd always wanted to do.

Plus, as he started writing this one, he "started getting very possessive of it" and eventually talked himself into directing, he said.

"I started thinking, 'Well, it would be foolish to turn down this opportunity to make a film that's guaranteed to be released in theatres, that already has an in-built fan base, and I really cared about it," said the Melbourne native, who also wrote the first three Saw films.

"So in hindsight, I would have been crazy not to do it."

Insidious: Chapter 3 is a standalone prequel to the previous films and focuses on psychic Elise (Lin Shaye).

When aspiring actress Quinn (Scott) asks Elise to help her get in touch with her dead mother, we learn of the medium's past with an otherworldly realm known as The Further.

Shaye has played many memorable characters throughout her career, including overly tanned neighbour Magda in There's Something About Mary and the vile landlady in Kingpin.

With Insidious, she was happy to play a character who was "very buildable," Shaye said.

"When I died in the first one, I had a little bit of sadness about the opportunity of not knowing what was going to happen if there was a second one. But it's just evolved into this wonderful evolution of a character. So I'm happy to be a part of it, for sure."

Snoop in the Dogg house

A CBC camera operator says she felt "belittled" after rapper Snoop Dogg referred to her as "thick" during an interview last week.

The CBC says during an interview on the set of Trailer Park Boys, Snoop Dogg made apparent references to Clattenburg's figure.

"I like your camera girl, too. She's thick. Damn," the rapper can be heard saying on the taped interview that the CBC later broadcast.

"It was creepy and awkward," said Clattenburg in comments posted on the CBC's website.

"He wanted to embarrass me and he did, I turned beet red," she said in an interview with CBC on Sunday. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Apparently male EDM superstar DJs are perfectly capable of being gossipy little sassbuckets. Oh, sorry, we're supposed to be calling them "producers." Anyway, Diplo — whom you may remember from allegedly dating Katy Perry just long enough to make John Mayer jealous — has some thoughts apparently about the love life of twink-y elf prince Zedd.

"I'm actually not enemies with Zedd by any means. I just think that he came from such a cool place, and now he's been pegged as a money-maker for a major label to do EDM, which to me isn't even a genre," Diplo tells Radio.com. "They've marketed him, even the fake relationship with Selena Gomez, all the things to sell records took away from the music."

Yeah, how dare you try to make laptop-fuelled club music for Las Vegas bachelorette parties about making money? And how many fake relationships can Ms. Gomez have?

Aniston cooking up a plan

Jennifer Aniston apparently has a cookbook up her sleeve.

"I'm working on it," she tells Yahoo! Beauty.

"I would like to do a lifestyle thing for people who struggle with dieting. I could just make anything for a diet taste delicious. I can mix certain things together that are all very healthy, but you don't feel like you're depriving yourself in any way."

That's all fine and good, Ms. Aniston, but nobody likes a braggart.

Jays walk off with sweep

MLB

Colabello's 9th-inning hit denies Astros win in Toronto

A wild, bizarre and unpredictable bottom of the ninth inning went the Toronto Blue Jays' way Sunday afternoon.

The frame included a rally-starting double by light-hitting Munenori Kawasaki, an infield pop-up that dropped in and an aggressive double steal. Chris Colabello capped it with a two-run single to give Toronto a thrilling 7-6 walkoff victory over the Houston Astros.

Kawasaki sliced a ground-rule double off Luke Gregerson and scored on a single by Jose Reyes, who stole second. Jose Bautista got under a pitch and it drifted towards Reyes at second, who squatted down and covered his head while staying on the base.

Shortstop Jonathan Villar bumped into Reyes as he tried to catch it, and the ball dribbled out to leave everyone safe.

"I've never seen that before," said Blue Jays starter R.A. Dickey. "And when that happened, we were all looking at each other like it's probably destiny that we're going to pull this one off."

Reyes and Bautista each moved up a base on the double steal and Colabello got his bat on an outside pitch and sent it up the middle to drive them home, sending the 35,571 fans at Rogers Centre into a tizzy.

"Getting the runner to third makes it a little bit harder for (Gregerson) to want to bounce one or throw his really nasty (slider)," Colabello said. "I told myself, 'If it's above my waist, I'm going to swing.'

"Little did I know I would swing at one that was in the other box. But thankfully it worked out."

The victory completed a three-game sweep for Toronto (28-30) and extended the Blue Jays' season-high winning streak to five games.

Bautista hit two solo homers and Canadian Russell Martin added a two-run shot in Toronto's third walkoff win of the season. Colabello also extended his hitting streak to a career-high 17 games.

It was the Astros' first loss of the season when leading after the eighth inning (29-1).

Stan the man at Roland Garros

Stan Wawrinka won the French Open by beating No. 1-seeded Novak Djokovic 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4 in the final Sunday, thwarting Djokovic's bid to complete a career Grand Slam.

The eighth-seeded Wawrinka, so long in the shadow of his Swiss Davis Cup teammate and pal, Roger Federer, collected his second major title after last year's Australian Open.

In doing so, Wawrinka put a stop to Djokovic's 28-match winning streak and left the 28-year-old Serb ruing another close call at Roland Garros. This was the third time in the last four years that Djokovic lost in the final at the clay-court tournament, the only major title he has never won.

This one ended, fittingly, with a down-the-line backhand winner from the 30-year-old Wawrinka. That's his best stroke and considered among the best in the game. He tossed his racket overhead, then met Djokovic at the net for a hug.

"One day, you will win Roland Garros," Wawrinka told Djokovic during the post-match ceremony. "You deserve it."

Wawrinka, who earned about $2 million US, was making his 11th French Open appearance, equalling Federer and Andre Agassi for most attempts before winning it. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canada starts off on right foot

WOMEN'S WORLD CUP

Captain Sinclair lifts host team to win in opener

Cam Tucker
Metro | Vancouver

As she has done so many times in the past, Christine Sinclair played the hero for the Canadian women's soccer team, this time in the opener of the 2015 FIFA Women's World Cup.

Before an announced crowd of more than 53,000 fans clad in red and white at Commonwealth Stadium, the Canadian captain stepped up to the penalty spot and scored on a perfect shot, off the inside of the post and in, to lift Canada to an anxious 1-0 win over China on Saturday.

That means three points to the Canadian side, which couldn't find a way to break through China's defence until a penalty kick was awarded for a foul in the box, leading to Sinclair's defining moment in second-half stoppage time.

Under head coach John Herdman, the women's soccer program in Canada has taken a turn in a positive direction, a bronze medal in the 2012 Olympics proving that.

Christine Sinclair scored the game-winning goal in Canada's 1-0 win over China on Saturday in Edmonton.
KEVIN C. COX/GETTY IMAGES

In turn, the expectations on Canada's entry in this tournament, especially on home soil, appear greater than in years past. A mix of younger talent with a veteran core group is highlighted by the fact the Canadians still possess one of the best players in the women's game in Sinclair.

For 90 minutes, the underdog China team frustrated Canada. It was ugly. That suited the Chinese side just fine. But they could only hold on for so long.

The Canadians had ball possession for 62 per cent of the game. They had 14 attempts, and went into full-on attack mode late in the second half, needing a goal. Their tactics forced China into a careless foul on 22-year-old Adriana Leon in the box, setting up Sinclair.

At 31 years old, and with 154 international goals in 224 caps, there is going to come a time when Sinclair is no longer around to be the hero for the Canadian squad.

The Canadians, playing in Group A, face New Zealand on Thursday in Edmonton. They'll need to be better than they were against China, especially as this tournament goes along.

But eventually on Saturday, with the nation watching, Sinclair literally got Canada's hopes of a Women's World Cup title on home soil off on the right foot.

Thousands of Barcelona's fans flocked to the city centre on Sunday to celebrate with their team a day after it won its fifth European Cup and completed a historic treble of titles.

Having already won the Spanish league and Copa del Rey trophies, Barcelona became the first team to complete a sweep of the Champions League and its two main domestic competitions in the same season on two separate occasions. Barcelona first achieved the rare feat in 2009.

On their return from Berlin, Xavi Hernandez and Andres Iniesta carried the large, elephant-eared trophy down the steps from Barcelona's chartered plane at El Prat airport.

Lionel Messi and the rest of Barcelona were then whisked to an open-top bus, which paraded them through the Catalan capital.

The team continued the party at the Camp Nou. The club said the 67,000 free tickets for the event were snatched up.

RECIPE Mango Strawberry Smoothie

EAT LIGHT AT HOME

Rose Reisman
rosereisman.com
@rosereisman

This is a great snack or dessert beverage. You can always up the protein and have this as a breakfast smoothie by using plain or vanilla Greek yogurt rather than the frozen yogurt. Tastes as good as it looks! Serves four.

Ready in
Prep time: 10 minutes

Ingredients
- 4 cups sliced strawberries or raspberries
- 1 ½ cups low-fat vanilla frozen yogurt
- 2/3 cup low-fat milk or almond milk
- 2 cups diced mango

Directions
1. In a blender or food processor, purée strawberries, half the frozen yogurt and half the milk until smooth. Divide into 4 glasses. Rinse out blender.

2. Add remaining frozen yogurt, milk and mango and purée until smooth. Pour over top berry mixture. Serve immediately.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
If your instincts tell you to be careful you must not ignore them. Today's Sun-Jupiter link may make you think you can do as you please but other aspects warn this may be the one time in ten that it goes wrong.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You can see which way the wind is blowing but will you be flexible enough to bend with the breeze? If you refuse to budge even an inch you may find that breeze turns into a hurricane.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Be careful what you say because with Jupiter, planet of excess, moving through the communications area of your chart you could easily go too far. Never forget that words can hurt as well as heal.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
If you keep your feelings bottled up inside you now they are likely to explode, so maybe it is better to let it all out. That cool, tough guy act is not fooling anyone.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Jupiter in your sign means you won't let anyone limit you in any way. You demand freedom of thought, expression and movement and if you are denied any those things you will kick up a huge fuss this week.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Stop tormenting yourself with fantasies of what might have been and get on with making a better life for yourself and those you love. You have been far too passive of late — get out there into the world and make things happen.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You may think you are a law unto yourself and for the time being you can certainly get away with a lot; but if you cut too many corners or break too many rules you are sure to create enemies.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The next few days will bring no end of challenges and you will need to be at your best to deal with them effectively. With Jupiter strong in your chart you feel you can take on the world and win. Let's hope you are right.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You have got to be positive and start thinking in terms of success rather than failure. Most importantly, you have got to believe in yourself. The universe has a way of rewarding those who do.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You need to remember that nothing stays the same forever. The next few days may be difficult but if you see the changes that are taking place as necessary, and potentially good, they will be easier to deal with.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
What does not destroy you will surely make you stronger, so stop feeling sorry for yourself and start standing up for your principles and beliefs. Your rivals may be powerful but you have right on your side, and that matters more.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
There may be times today when you wish you were some place else, but the fact is you are where you are and you have to complete what others expect of you.
